The text is Haberly's recollections of visiting the library of All Souls at Oxford, seeing there a copy of Thomas Littleton's Tenores novelli [1482?], and noting the curious behaviour of various Oxford types. It may have been the opening of an autobiographical sketch, or perhaps the introduction to another planned work (though probably not a reprint of Littleton's legal work). The surviving sheet includes a few errors, and the work may not have progressed beyond proofing this first forme.' Paul Nash from his manuscript bibliography. Nash C4.
